A Message From Our President

“A (very busy) Chamber of Influence”

Advocacy is central to our mission: to be a Chamber of Influence. This requires active engagement with policy-makers and learning about & promoting important public policy issues.

- CCCBI hosted a roundtable with area Chamber leaders in a meeting with US Senator Pat Toomey
- Our Board & Government Affairs Council discussed the PA Budget with PA Budget Secretary Charles Zogby
- Lt. Gov. Jim Cawley was our guest and talked about the budget, Marcellus Shale and job creation—at a recent advocacy event
- DEP Secretary Chris Abruzzo & Agricultural Secretary George Greig were the speakers at a round-table discussion with members of Chester County’s very important Agricultural & Horse-breeding communities—our first market-targeted event
- PA Chamber President Gene Barr recently discussed legislative priorities, challenges and opportunities with our Board & Government Affairs Council
- June 19, we will have another market-targeted event when we host PA Banking & Securities Secretary, Glenn Moyer...and,
- Cuyler Walker, our endorsed candidate for the state house (district 158) won his primary election

These type of events underscore who we are as a Chamber. They allow us to learn about issues, and advocate for policies that help the economy, our County—and, our members.

It reminds our policy-makers—and our Chamber colleagues—that we are a leader on issues that matter to the economy—in our state, our region and our County.

We become not only advocates for our issues—and job-creating policies, we also position ourselves as advocates, watchdogs and a resource.

We will continue to host events like this. We have some exciting events planned for the fall. We encourage your participation in attending—and planning these events. Let me know what you want to learn about & advocate for.

Our Chamber is a chamber of influence—but we are only as strong as our membership. Thank you.

Please feel free to contact Guy Ciarrocchi by email at guy@cccbi.org

We had to move it inside because of the weather but we still had a great time and great turnout.

Chamber member Bill Belknap and his company aEONRG, win Score's Small Business of the Year in Chester County.
As the old saying goes, there are only two things guaranteed in life: Death and Taxes. Pennsylvania businesses have been eagerly awaiting the death of the Capital Stock and Franchise Tax (CSFT) for over a decade, yet despite their patience the CSFT is still kicking, and it now seems as though it may continue longer than anticipated.

People don’t like taxes, but most come to the understanding that taxes are a “necessary evil.” In order for the Commonwealth to continue to protect the health and safety of its citizens and provide services, taxes are to some extent “necessary.” However, doing away with the CSFT is crucial to making Pennsylvania more competitive to companies looking to locate a business in the Commonwealth or one thinking of expanding their business because it is a tax on business assets within Pennsylvania. Most states have either a business income tax or a business assets tax, but not both. In Pennsylvania, we have both and we have the dubious distinction of having the highest Corporate Net Income tax (CNI) at 9.99% and the CSFT.

For those of you who think you’ve been hearing about this phase out for years, you’re absolutely correct. It began during the Ridge Administration when the economy was good and the Commonwealth had money for tax cuts, but it’s been slow going to reach the finish line. The phase-out has been halted several times over the last two decades, because of the budget deficits created following the recession that began in 2008. In 2009, during the Rendell Administration, not only was the scheduled phase out suspended, but the rate was retroactively increased to 2.89 mills (one one-thousandth of a dollar, or a tenth of a cent).

Under the original phase-out plan, the CSFT was supposed to be phased-out completely this year, but instead, the phase-out was suspended again in July, 2013. Thankfully for businesses, it was not retroactively increased. From a business‘ budgeting perspective, the suspension was akin to a tax hike. In fact, since the phase-out began in the late 1990’s, the tax has been reduced 85%. More good news is that the phase-out was reinstated in 2014 lowering it from its 2013 rate of 0.89 mills to 0.67 mills for 2014. It is scheduled to be cut again to 0.45 mills in January, 2015, and then completely done away with by January, 2016. The bad news is that, with revenue projections at somewhere between $800 million and $1.3 billion behind projections, both members of the Senate and House are again saying that they may have to look at suspending the phase out to come up with the funding necessary to keep the Commonwealth running.

Governor Corbett’s tax plan for Pennsylvania with regard to business taxes would decrease the 9.99% CNI tax to 6.99% by 2025. Another part of the proposal would allow a business to carry forward a greater percentage of their business losses. Currently, a company can carry forward the higher of $3 million or 20% of their taxable liability. Under the proposal, the Net Operating Loss (NOL) carry forward would be the higher of $5 million or 30% of the taxable liability.

However, without meaningful pension reform as part of the budget process this year, which is projected to save the Commonwealth approximately $610 million, phase-out of the CSFT and any other meaningful business tax reforms are going to be a difficult goal for Governor Corbett to reach.
Every owner of a small business dreams of the kind of success his or her business can achieve. We start out with dreams, a plan, and objectives. Then the reality of owning a small business sinks in. What happens to the business if...? The fears that we put aside to be able to commit to starting a new business in the first place are starting to come back again. What if? While the issues that can plague a small business may not be the same for all businesses, there is one indisputable fact: Every company faces Risk.

Small business owners may tell you to have the kind of success large corporations enjoy is merely a dream; large corporations have a formula that relies on the type of resources small businesses cannot afford, and so that kind of success can’t be achieved. This is a myth and the time has come to debunk it. Small business can utilize those same resources to manage risk and ensure success.

Internal Audit is a key player in how corporations and big business keep an eye on their risks, whether internal to the business or external influences and pressures that can place a company’s success at risk. STOP! You say, I own a small business, I can’t afford to hire an internal audit group! I can manage my own risks. The response to this is to engage a consulting audit group to work with you to help manage and grow your business the way you envisioned and planned.

Here’s how this might work for your company, with the following guiding principles:

1. An internal audit consulting group (“The Group”) acts as a Governance, Audit and Compliance division within your company. The Group works with you by providing advice and counsel on the ways in which a company might eliminate blockades to success that unanswered risk may pose to your company.
2. The Group works with management to put into place the company’s Commitment to Integrity and Ethical Values that form the basis for a Governance Framework in which the emphasis is on how the company can fulfill its objectives and become successful.
3. The Group advises on the clarity and appropriateness for escalation of issues that are likely to occur, with significant enough consequences to pose risks to the company’s goals. Empowering middle management and staff to resolve issues that may pose risks frees senior management to focus on strategy and planning.
4. A company’s operations are a set of processes, all interconnected, feeding information and data throughout the company in the pursuit of company objectives. Management works in concert with Operations to create and implement controls to head off risk and create new synergies for innovation and growth.
5. The Group does one thing for your company that you cannot do for yourself: objectively and independently assess whether the risk management measures in place are in fact working as designed. You will receive an opinion from the Group, based on sound auditing principles and standards, on the overall health of your company.

It is worth noting here that there are some significant benefits to be realized that go well beyond that of the company’s bottom line. Engaging in active risk management may result in a company’s risk profile being raised to lower insurance ratings and premiums; the company’s cost of borrowing money may be decreased, and investors may relax knowing their investment is safe, all of which combines to improve the company’s bottom line.
